On September 12, 1963, SIERRA was interviewed by the Miami Office of the FBI. SIERRA said he recently opened an office in Miami to handle his efforts in unifying Cuban anti-CASTRO organizations. SIERRA said he was the President of the Cuban Bar Association in Illinois, had come to Miami in about May, 1963, and had united 85% of all Cuban exiles. He said he recently returned from Nicaragua, where the president of that country offered bases for the Cuban exiles. SIERRA said he would not contact any American firms for money donations, and his group would expel any member who attempted to collect money.

On September 26, 1963, ALDO VERA SERAFIN, 1383 N. W. 34th Street, advised his anti-CASTRO organization had received about $900.00 from SIERRA, and is expecting to receive more money in the future.

On October 31, 1963, GILBERTO RODRIGUEZ FERNANDEZ, 620 N. W. 69th Street, Miami, advised that in June, 1963, he and about seven other Cubans, members of SIERRA's committee, visited Chicago, and went to the Union Tank Car Company, where they met with WILLIAM BROWDER, General Counsel, and J. W. VAN GORKOM, President. These two Americans told them they favored a Cuban Government in exile. The Americans went on to state that if and when this committee established a government in exile, perhaps they could get United States Government support and financing from other sources.

RODRIGUEZ said that after the committee returned to Miami, they established subcommittees; however, SIERRA disregarded them, gave conflicting orders, did not cooperate, and acted in a dictatorial manner.

SIERRA came up with ridiculous military plans, was impossible to work with, was found out to be a liar, and was unrealistic. He also wasted the committee's time and efforts. He spent money on cheap jewelry, new clothes, obtained a new car, traveled, and gave money away without the authority or knowledge of the committee. As a consequence,
